A Scottish Courtier.

Recently there was attached to the Prince of Wale's household a Scotchman whose car city for bluntness scarcely fits him for the delicate duties of court The princess of Wales, who has a burning desire that her husband should be as popular with the people as is the king, is always endeavoring to find out the exact feeling with which the people regard him, and queries every newcomer in the establishment for information, Calling the latest addition to her side one day, she said:

Now, tell me the honest truth-what do the public say about the prince?" "Why, how should I know, ma'am?"

"Don't say such a thing as that. You do know, and I do want to hear." After some consideration, and feeling that there was no way out of it, the Scotchman blurted out: "Well, ma'am, to tell con the truth, they say he drinks like a fish."

"How disgraceful and unkind, and unjust, too, of them to say such a thing." returned the princess with tears in her "What an untruth, too! I really don't think you should have told me such a thing."
